

One day when we were at school, we had a big rain. It rained hard almost all day. Just before school let out, the sun came out. Water was everywhere. Our road was a three-path road. At Beaver Dam we had foot logs to walk across the water by the side of the road. Water covered the foot logs. The large boys & parents met to carry us across the foot logs. I will never forget how we waited in line to be carried across the water. Carlis Roland carried me across. The Frank Roland family, Carlis' father, lived where the Jim Warren family later lived. Elmer Keeffe owns that place now.

The mules would not go across the water. It would run up in the buggy, our way of traveling.

No one can ever forget that day. This was early in the spring.
